SOLEMNITY OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY

January 1st, 2022

Another Wise Man

A tall, white haired man walked slowly along a lane toward Bethlehem. Every now and then he looked up into the blue sky and a smile of joy and glad expression overspread his wrinkled face. After a while he sat down on the grass by the roadside, and taking from his loose gown a flask of myrrh, a piece of gold and a large, blood-red ruby, he gazed at them lovingly.

“Oh, that I had more!” he murmured. “Wealth and beauty to lay at the feet of the beautiful Child. Oh, that I could bring Him all that is lovely and precious in the earth!”

As he drew near to the town a nosy crowd blocked the roadway, and when the old man reached it he saw that the shouting folk were gathered in angry quarreling around a poor boy who had been beaten by a hard master.

“Ah,” said the old man to himself, “how can I assist this helpless boy?” And then, almost without realizing what he was doing, he stepped up to the youth and broke the neck of the bottle he was carrying and poured the soothing myrrh over the cuts and bruises. He had done all that he could, and with gentle words, left the boy and started for Bethlehem.

A hand was laid on his arm and a piteous moan came from a miserable beggar who stood in his way.

“Oh, alms, alms! Give, good sir for I am very old and wretched.” And when the white haired man looked into his face, he could not resist. He had no money except the one gold piece he was carrying to the Child at Bethlehem, and that he drew out quickly and placed in the beggar’s outstretched hand.

“I still have my glorious ruby,” he whispered to himself.

Soon he was at Bethlehem and threaded his way slowly through the crowded streets. His way lay past the slave-market. There a little child was being held for auction and nearby crouched the mother, head bowed to the ground at the thought of the dreadful life that awaited her little one.

“My ruby,” he thought, “My ruby!” And drawing it forth he pushed quickly through the crowd and bought the child. His face beamed with love and happiness as he guided the little one past the on-lookers, to the weeping mother.

“Take your child,” he said. “For now he is really yours.” And not waiting to hear her thanks he threaded his way through the market place.

Then he suddenly stood still. His smile faded from his face.

“Alas, alas, what have I done? I have no gift to lay at the feet of the little Child of Bethlehem.”

Seeing that folks were watching his tears, he strode forward. His head bowed in grief, he wanted no one to see, he chose his road carefully. It was the way leading the most quickly back to the home from which he had started so full of hope.

“With empty hands I could not go,” he said to himself, as he walked slowly on. Soon he was too tired to go any further. With a sigh he sat down and rested his head against the trunk of a tree. His eyes closed in well deserved sleep.

His face looked tired and sad, but as he slept it changed. The weary lines were smoothed away, and again a happy smile broke over it and when he at last he woke he felt so glad that he smiled all the way home.

And why? While he had slept he had dreamed. He saw the Child of Bethlehem on his mother’s knee and found within the humble room the sweet order of myrrh. He knelt to worship and when he lifted his eyes he saw that on the forehead of the Child his ruby sparkled and trembled, while the tiny hand a gold piece gleamed. And as he gazed in adoration, he saw that the Child Himself was the one he had bought with his last gift in the slave market.
